Campbell's 100 % Bar Passage Rate Makes History

Congratulatory letters, phone calls, faxes — I have received messages from well wishers in practically every form possible. Any day now, I'm expecting to see one of those precariously small airplanes that you see at Myrtle Beach straining against the wind over Harnett County and pulling a long banner behind that reads: "Congratulations to Campbell on a 100% pass rate."

As Jackie Gleason would have exclaimed under these circumstances, "How sweet it is!"

This column gives me the opportunity to thank all of you. Thanks for contacting me to communicate your joyful celebration of the success of the Campbell law Class of 1994. On behalf of the members of that now famous class, on behalf of the dedicated members of the law faculty and staff, on behalf of the Campbell law grads from earlier years who have also blazed a trail of excellence on both the bar examination and in the practice of law, on behalf of the president and vice presidents of Campbell University who support our program so consistently and so enthusiastically, and on behalf of Campbell's supportive board of trustees,

THANK YOU!

Thanks also to over two hundred attorneys, judges, and bar leaders who traveled to this campus during the past academic year to volunteer their time as adjunct professors, guest lecturers and judges in our trial and appellate court programs. We could not have provided our students with a relevant, challenging and meaningful legal education without your help.

Finally, thanks to the employers out there who have recognized the excellence inherent in Campbell's rigorous program of legal education. By supporting us in the placement office, you already have astutely recognized what the September 2, 1994 News & Observer headline boldly proclaims:

"Campbell law class best, bar none."

The Norman Adrian Wiggins School of Law Alumni Newsletter
Wiggins and Kivett Halls have once again awakened and returned to life as a new batch of fresh, legal minds has crossed their thresholds. Soon after the first arrivals began to settle in, the now initiated second and third year students made their way back to campus. The start of the school year offered something new for both the first year students and the upper-classmen. The law school instituted an orientation session for all students this year.

The IL’s arrived on the scene on Wednesday, August 10, 1994. They were required to wear courtroom attire for this day as pictures for the placement book were near the top of the list of things to do. Registration for classes ranked among these first activities as well. After lunch, Dean Pat Hetrick gave the official Norman Adrian Wiggins School of Law welcome. Next, these aspiring attorneys made the rounds throughout the law school complex to familiarize themselves with the buildings. At around 2:30 P.M., their first day of law school came to a close.

Thursday began, as did the first day, with complimentary coffee and donuts. Little did they know that this was not an everyday event at the law school. As they were all gathered in the large classroom of Wiggins Hall, officials from the university financial aid office informed them about a topic near and dear to most of their hearts, "How To Pay For Law School".

From the topic of money, the discussion shifted to a related topic - getting a job. Assistant Dean James Bailey introduced the first years to the placement office, including the services it has to offer.

At about 10:15 A.M. Assistant Professor Richard Bowser began the IL’s first lecture on the law. The topic was, "Sources of the Law and Legal Precedent." This lecture was followed by their first legal assignment. At this point, many of the first year students hoped that the day was over. But alas, it was only lunchtime.

When the afternoon session began, the ILs were introduced to law school instruction, i.e. the Socratic Method. On hand to conduct this session was Associate Dean James McLaughlin. With a second year teaching assistant cleverly placed in the classroom, he called upon her to recite a real property case, Marini v. Ireland (cite omitted). Rumor has it that several of the ILs questioned, "Is this really what we have to do?"

Professor F. Leary Davis began the last session of the day by instructing the first year students on two very im-important skills, thinking like a lawyer and how to brief a case. Following this lecture, the teaching assistants entertained question and answer sessions. We can all imagine what that scene must have been like.

Orientation for these first year students continued on Friday. The Student Bar Association welcomed them on behalf of the student body. Next, students were instructed on the seriousness with which the law school holds its Honor Code and the role of the Honor Court. Dr. J. Stanley McQuade instructed them with a legal history/jurisprudence overview. The day ended after lunch with more discussion on case analysis.

Monday continued with more of Dr. McQuade. This day also brought the introduction to legal research and case citation.

First year students received cordial greetings on Tuesday from the university in the persons of Dr. Norman A. Wiggins, President of Campbell University and Dr. Jerry M. Wallace, Provost. Each speaker expressed to the students the unique opportunity they have before them. Furthermore, the students learned of the unique atmosphere that surrounds Campbell University.

On Wednesday, the first year students enjoyed a brief break from the classroom with this day off before classes began on Thursday. However, this day was reserved for a new encounter for the second and third year students. This encounter came in the form of an orientation program for them. First to speak to the wondering crowd was Professor Lynn Buzzard. He raised the interest of many of the students by informing them of a pilot mediation program with the Harnett County courts. Through his alternative dispute resolution class, students have the opportunity to act as mediators for selected court cases.

Dean Pat Hetrick welcomed the returning students back from summer vacation. He expressed his gratitude to the student body for their cooperation, attitudes, and helpfulness in making the law school a better place. He continued with reports from alumni who have informed him that, indeed, Campbell Law School has made them better lawyers and thus, there has been a corresponding difference in their careers from other lawyers' careers. He concluded with brief comments on changes in the Placement Office which will make it a more effective tool for gaining employment. He deferred to Assistant Dean James R. Bailey, Jr. ('79) for further explanations of these changes.

Associate Dean James B. McLaughlin, Jr. also welcomed the students back to the law school. He explained the new grading system for elective courses. Basically, third year students will be graded as usual. Beginning with the second year students and those thereafter, grades in elective courses will be pass/fail. Their transcripts will reflect either unsatisfactory, satisfactory, or honors in these courses.

After the break for lunch, Dean Hetrick introduced Fred Parker, Executive Director of the North Carolina Board of Bar Examiners. His comments centered around the bar admissions process. He explained further the in-depth process involved in applying for the bar exam, taking the bar exam, and licensure. He emphasized the seriousness with which the Board reviews all applicants.

Assistant Dean Bailey concluded the orientation session with a report from the placement office. He encouraged the students to use the placement office in their efforts to locate employment, be it summer or full-time after graduation. There are new tools and services available through the placement office for students' job searches.

With these last remarks, Orientation '94 was over. Second and third years students streamed out of the building only to return the next day to begin classes for the 1994-95 school year. Second year students were confident after having survived their first year. Third year students already had their minds on future events to take place in May and July.
FRED PARKER SPEAKS AT LAW SCHOOL ORIENTATION

Mr. Fred P. Parker III, Executive Director of the Board of Law Examiners, was the featured speaker at the Second and Third Year Law Student Orientation held on August 17, 1994. Mr. Parker made a very helpful presentation on the bar application process and timetable. He gave practical advice to the law students concerning common problems in the application process. He explained what the Board was concerned about and gave reasons for their concern. He concluded by answering questions from the students and from Dean Hetrick.

Mr. Parker has been Executive Director of the Board of Law Examiners for 21 years. He is a leader in national bar examiner organizations and writes a column on legal issues related to bar examinations.

During his introduction of Mr. Parker, Dean Hetrick commented to the students on the excellent communication that exists between the Board of Law Examiners and the deans of the North Carolina law schools. The five law school deans meet with Mr. Parker and the entire Board of Law Examiners once each year to discuss the most recent bar examination and other matters of concern to the deans and the law examiners.

Mr. Parker has volunteered to return to Campbell later in the academic year with a member of the Board of Law Examiners to discuss the bar examination process in more detail. We look forward to that visit.
Dr. Norman Adrian Wiggins, President of Campbell University and member of the law faculty, continues a tradition by greeting the first year law students during orientation. His talk centered upon the responsibilities, challenges and demands of law school and the legal profession.

Students at orientation were required to read and brief cases. Which unlucky person was called on to recite?

Students from the class of 1997 read their class bulletin board for upcoming events and class assignments.
ABA HONORS CAMPBELL LAW SCHOOL

The Norman Adrian Wiggins School of Law was recently honored with an award by the ABA's Law Practice Management Section at its annual meeting in Napa, California. The award was presented in recognition of the law school's "pioneering and continuing efforts to teach competent, efficient, economical and innovative law practice management techniques." Traveling to California to accept the award, which was approved by the ABA's Board of Governors, were Campbell law professors F. Leary Davis, Jr., Richard T. Rodgers, Charles C. Lewis, Richard A. Lord, and Thomas P. Anderson and LPM Section Member and 1991 law alumnus Earl T. Brown of Greenville.

DON CARROLL SPEAKS ON PALS

W. Donald Carroll, Jr., Director of The North Carolina State Bar's Positive Action for Lawyers (PALS), made a presentation to the first year law students in the Professionalism Lecture Series on August 24. He spoke frankly about substance abuse among law students and attorneys and emphasized the adverse impact that substance abuse has on a person's professionalism as a lawyer.

Mr. Carroll identified the symptoms of substance abuse and the signs indicating that a person might have a problem. He added that we have to be willing to be our brother's and sister's keeper when we see substance abuse in another. He concluded by explaining the special mission of PALS to the law students and then answered numerous questions from the audience.
THE N.C. COURT OF APPEALS COMES TO CAMPBELL

On August 23rd the North Carolina Court of Appeals held its second session at The Norman Adrian Wiggins School of Law (another panel of the court came to Campbell in the spring of this year). This panel, consisting of Judge K. Edward Greene, Judge Joseph R. John and Judge Elizabeth G. McCrodden, heard three arguments in the morning session, lunched with students and faculty in the Pine Burr Room in Marshbanks cafeteria and then returned to hear two more arguments in the afternoon. The cases represented a typical selection for the court, involving such issues as uninsured motorist insurance coverage, the admissibility of testimony in a child molestation prosecution, an alleged conflict of interest in legal representation, and the parameters of parental immunity.

As part of the Professionalism Lecture Program for first-year students instituted by Dean Hetrick last year, this year's IL class attend some of the oral arguments. After the final argument Judge Greene moderated a questions and answer session with the first-year students. Students were ready with questions that ranged from the technical world of procedure to the jurisprudential world of judicial review. The students, many of whom had never seen a court in session, were very appreciative that the Court of Appeals had taken a road trip to Harnett County.
Faculty Profile

In an effort to keep law school alumni better informed with the events and happenings at the law school, The Campbell Lawyer will include profiles on all of the law school faculty. This series of profiles will not necessarily be a biography of our faculty members. Rather, this series is an opportunity to catch-up on what is happening with the professors here at the law school.

To begin this series, we start with the “Deans”, Dean Patrick K. Hetrick and Founding Dean and Professor of Law, F. Leary Davis.

Dean Hetrick and the law school as a whole is preparing for a “site visit” by the American Bar Association. This is part of a routine, seven year process that the ABA performs as part of its accreditation criteria. Part in parcel of this visit, the faculty has undertaken to write a self-study of the law school.

In the area of honors and recognition, Dean Hetrick reports that the law school has recently received an award for “pioneering and continuing efforts to teach competent, efficient, economical, and innovative law practice management techniques.” This award was presented by the American Bar Association Law Practice Management Section.

In a related area, the law school continues to perform on the cutting-edge. The law school is moving heavily into CD-ROM technology. This is due to the generosity of Thomson Publishing Co., also known as Lawyer’s Cooperative Publishing. This grant is being used to set up a new computer lab to train students and attorneys alike in the use of law related software and CD-ROM technology.

Dean Hetrick continues to chart paths for the law school that lead to success. The measure of this success is the product that the law school puts out. As the bar results of law school’s recent graduates and the accomplishments of its licensed attorneys demonstrate, the product is of a high quality.

One final note to this profile. On being asked why he chose the law as a career, he replied in classic Hetrick humor, “It was too cold in my dad’s meat market and the hours were too long.”

F. Leary Davis

Patrick K. Hetrick

What more can be said about our Dean? Actually there is quite a bit. His latest project has been revising the Fourth Edition of North Carolina Real Estate for Brokers and Salesman. This compilation was co-authored with Larry Outlaw, Director of the North Carolina Real Estate Commission. At the time of this writing, the edition was due to be released in late August, 1994. Our Dean is not only known in legal circles, but in real estate circles as well.

Along with Associate Dean James B. McLaughlin, Jr., the Dean has just completed the Fourth Edition of Webster’s on Real Property. This edition is due for release at the end of 1994. Many attorneys have been known to state that this work is a must for any lawyer who practices real property law. Dean Hetrick and Dean McLaughlin, and let us not forget the law students who help them out, work diligently to produce a quality work product. This diligence is reflected in the status with which the book has been accorded by the legal community.
There are many ways to describe Founding Dean and Professor of Law, F. Leary Davis. One way that has never fit and still does not is "idle." This man is a busy as he ever was. The question then that need not now be asked is, "how is he doing these days?" After a period of illness several years ago, he is in good health these days. He is training again, in fact he is known to over-do-it at times. His physical exercise routine includes regular running. He recently ran in a road race in Raleigh. However, his physical industriousness is matched only by his scholastic and professional efforts.

Dean Davis spent the Fall of 1993 in Colorado Springs, Colorado at the Center For Creative Leadership. This program seeks to develop the personal attributes of professionals. Their emphasis is to bring this aspect of a professional up to par with that of knowledge and skill. Interestingly enough, this idea is the idea that was, and still is, the guiding principle of the law school at Campbell. It is no coincidence that Dean Davis spent some time at the Center in Colorado. The program at the Center for Creative Leadership was lauded by the Wall Street Journal last year as the best executive leadership program in the country. Dean Davis is exploring ways to bring some of their ideas to the law school.

One of the goals that Dean Davis actively strives for is to find ways to help lawyers to become better lawyers. In seeking this goal, Dean Davis's research has revealed many interesting things. For example, his research has shown that women in law school are just as competent as men in law school. This competence level continues on into their legal careers. With regards to the general population, men and women lawyers are more alike. However, between each other, they show more differences than men and women in the general population. Perhaps this comes as no surprise to some, to others it may well be a big surprise.

Among the many activities that Dean Davis has been involved, he was Chairperson for the Quality of Life Survey Committee for the North Carolina Bar Association. During his tenure, the Committee completed the most comprehensive quality of life survey that has ever been produced. In the same area, he has been the chairperson of the North Carolina Bar Association Committee for Lawyer Effectiveness and Quality of Life. Most recently, he has become a member of the North Carolina Bar Association Task Force on Quality and Value of Legal Services.

Dean Davis is also pioneering ways to introduce innovative legal education techniques. These efforts have lead to organizing workshops for law professors to learn these techniques. His work has now expanded to a national scale. A Conference on the Assessment and Development in the Legal Profession is scheduled to take place sometime in the summer of 1995.

One of the purposes of founding the Campbell University School of Law was to close the gap between law school and law practice. As far back as 1975 when Dean Davis took on the task of becoming the law school's first dean, the notion of closing the gap was foremost. In another demonstration that the law school is "one step ahead of the pack", in 1992 the American Bar Association confirmed this same idea. The Section of Legal Education and Admissions to the Bar issued is report entitled, "Legal Education and Professional Development - An Educational Continuum, Report of the Task Force on Law Schools and the Profession: Narrowing the Gap". Dean Davis forecasts that the law school will continue to be a model to other schools around the country.

On the personal front, Dean Davis's children are all grown but not yet out of school. He has one son studying for his MBA at William & Mary. Another son will soon be entering Yale Law School after a stint with and elections campaign in Montana. His daughter is a junior at Wake Forest University. His wife, Joy, remains a school counselor with the Harnett County School System, as well as, President of the Davis Consulting Group, Inc.

Dean Davis likes to quote the late Professor Broderick who said, "Law professors bask in the reflected glory of their graduates." Dean Davis feels that there is much "basking" by professors here at the Norman Adrian Wiggins School of Law.

J. Scott Truax

Perhaps the following scenario sounds familiar. You have many, many clients, each of which needs you now. The thought of taking a vacation is only a far away dream. The phone rings constantly. The mail needs to be opened and read. There is a pile of telephone messages on your desk. Needless to say, your job requires six days out of your week, and now occupies much of your thought time outside the office. The law is a jealous mistress, according to the Justice Holmes quote, anyway.
J. Scott Truax faced much of the same thing until...He decided it was time for a sabbatical. Scott built up a solo practice of his own in his hometown of Farmington, New Mexico. One year after receiving his license to practice in both New Mexico and Oklahoma, he opened his own law practice. At the time he decided to take some time off, Scott had some two hundred (200) clients dependent on him.

Scott established several areas he wished to explore during his sabbatical. First, he wanted to perform some personal-growth assessment. Next, he wanted to develop a new language in a native-speaker's environment. Third, he wanted to spend some quality time with a close personal friend. Fourth he wanted to update his law practice management skills, particularly with computers. Finally, he wanted to reacquaint himself with a graduate-level academic environment. With these goals in mind, Scott composed his sabbatical year in four stages.

The first stage of Scott's sabbatical took place in Hawaii. He spent three months there with about 75 other people at a camp. They sang hymns, listened to speakers, and held small group discussions. He even had a work assignment at the camp as an ice cream scooper.

Next, Scott was off to the Ukraine where he lived with a native family that spoke very little English. He experienced the ordinary, day-to-day existence of the people as they lived it. He ate borscht when they ate it, put on a fur hat with ear flaps when the snow flew, and bathed when they did (which was, incidently, very infrequently due to heat shutoffs, housing space shortages, etc.)

Scott soon learned of the kind and gracious nature of the Ukrainian people who were very interested in an American in their midst. He was invited to speak to school children. He was even asked to lecture on the meaning of the Easter Holiday. Moreover, Scott found himself quizzing medical institute students about standard medical procedures as they prepared for oral examinations. One of his fondest memories is attending church services conducted entirely in Russian. Listening to familiar hymns helped him to learn the language.

Then moving on to Sweden, Scott lived with a good friend he knew in MBA School who had married a Swedish wife. The couple had moved to a little house in the south-central Swedish countryside which overlooked a sparkling blue lake. Here, Scott began to reacquaint himself with computer technology. Sweden has the highest percentage of households with both personal computers and cellular telephones in the world. The computer Scott used had software all composed in the Swedish language which made using it even more of a holistic learning experience.

Even though most of the Swedish people speak English, Scott felt somewhat disoriented coming fresh out of the Ukraine into Sweden. English is his native language and he learned Spanish very early in his life, so he was used to translating from English to Spanish. While he was learning Russian, he would think in English, translate to Spanish, then go back to English, then back to Russian, and finally to English again. As you might imagine, this process can be frustrating. But further change was just around the corner.

Scott then returned to the United States. However, he did not return to just anywhere. He made his way to Buies Creek, North Carolina, home of the Adrian Wiggins School of Law and the now famous 100 percent North Carolina Bar Exam pass rate. Important to Scott was the fact that Buies Creek was where Professor Richard Rodgers, recognized as one of the country's top experts of law practice management technology could be found.

Today, Scott is the Attorney Practitioner in Residence here at the Law School. He is under the expert tutelage of Professor Rodgers. He is becoming more familiar with the cutting edge of computer technology and its application to the law office, such as that being developed in the Law School's new computer lab.

Certainly, Scott's journey to Buies Creek has been adventurous. He has experienced much of what he set out to experience. He will be in Buies Creek a while before he returns to the practice of law. Much like those who have experienced "the Creek" before him, it is sure to leave a lasting impression on him as has his trek around the world.

Professor Beci on the Move

Professor Don Beci recently testified before the North Carolina House of Representatives (a subcommittee of the Committee on Courts and Justice). He spoke on his research regarding the use of deadly force in defense of habitations, and he suggested modifications to pending legislation. The version of the "Intruder Bill" that Professor Beci proposed was ultimately adopted by the General Assembly.

Professor Beci, an appointed member of the Bar Association’s Administration of Justice Task Force, is assisting in a study to improve the State’s criminal justice system.

Reappointed by the North Carolina Conference of Superior Court Judges, Don Beci will serve as Reporter to the Pattern Jury Instructions Committee.
